[2][3] In February 2010, a few months after the creation of the website,[4] about 35,000 people were on Chatroulette at any time. Around the beginning of March, creator Andrey Ternovskiy estimated the site to have about 1.5 million users. [5] According to a survey conducted by RJMetrics, about one out of eight laps on Chatroulette provided the content "R-rated". [6] Parody shows like The Daily Show and South Park have flashed this aspect of the service, and nudity has become a consolidated part of the site's reputation.in spring 2020, ternovskiy appointed andrew andrewDone, Australian technology entrepreneur, like Chatroulette CEO. [8] Done has previously founded companies such as Simple Machines in Sydney, Australia, and has operated as CTO for more technological start-ups, such as Goodlord in London. [9] Following product changes in spring 2020, and improved by COVID-19 Pandemic, Chatroulette user numbers are more than doubled between 2019 and 2020. [9] Due to a great revival of Chatroulette in June 2020, including new features and a more reliable and modern platform, user numbers should grow continuously. [8] Overview The Chatroulette site was created by Andrey Ternovskiy, a 17-year-old high school student in Moscow, Russia. [10] Ternovskiy says that the concept originated from video chat that he used to have with friends on Skype, and that he wrote the first version of Chatroulette in "two days and two nights". [5] Ternovskiy chose the name "Chatroulette" after having seen The Deer Hunter, a 1978 film set in the Vietnam War in which prisoners of war are forced to play Russian roulette. [11] The site mates its users randomly, and allows them to type messages to each other, looking at the other user's webcam feed. Ternovskiy built the site on an old computer he had in his bedroom. The site initially had 20 users, and then doubled every day for a period, according to Ternovskiy in 2010. [12] He argues that he has not advertised or posted his site anywhere; in fact, people who start talking about the site and knowledge of it gradually spread by word of mouth. While the number of active users has grown, Ternovskiy has had to rewrite the entire code to cope with the load, whose management is the most challenging part of its project. Despite the expansion of the service, it codifies everything on its own. Ternovskiy looked for help from his frienddate Vlad Kostanyan, who helped him with his side projects. [13] At the beginning of November 2009, shortly after the launch of the site, he had 500 visitors a day. [5] A month later there wereThe site was described in The New York Times,[10] The New Yorker,[14] New York Magazine,[15] and in Good Morning America,[16] Newsnight in the United Kingdom,[17] Tosh.0,[18] and The Daily Show with Jon Stewart. [19] In February 2010, about 35,000 people were on Chatroulette at any time. [20] In early March 2010, Ternovskiy estimated that the site had about 1.5 million users, about 33% of the United States and 5% of Germany. [5] An early growth phase was funded by an investment of $10,000 by Ternovskiy's parents, who soon paid back. [5] Starting in March 2010[update], Ternovskiy was running the site from his childhood bedroom, assisted by four programmers who were working remotely, and the site was supported through advertising links to an online dating service. [5] The site uses several high-end servers all located in Frankfurt, Germany. [21] In June 2010 Andrey was rewarded by Webby for Internet excellence [22] According to the New York Times, the site is intensely engaging. [23] An informal study published in March 2010 showed that almost half of all Chatroulette's "spins" connected a user with someone in the United States, while the next most likely country was France, with 15%. On average, in sessions showing a single person 89% of these were males and 11% were female; 8% of the laps showed more people behind the camera. About one out of three females appeared as a group, and one out of 12 males. One user was most likely to meet a webcam that has no one at all with one female. About one in eight turns gave someone seemingly naked, exposing, or engaging in a sexual act. A user was twice as likely to encounter a sign that requires female nudity that to meet real female nudity. [6] The website uses Adobe Flash forvideo and access the user's webcam. the peer-to-peer network capabilities of flash (via rtmfp) allow almost all video and audio streams to travel directly between user computers, withoutserver bandwidth. However, some router combinations will not allow UDP traffic to flow between them; therefore, fall back to RTMP is necessary. [24] Initially, the site asked users to confirm that they are at least 18 years old and agree on terms to not transmit any offensive or pornographic content. No login or registration required. However, the website now requires users to register for free before they can use the features of the site. Enrollment requires a username, email address and password. Details such as age, sex and location can be added further in profile and settings. This card also allows users to write a section 'about me' on themselves, including languages that speak and their taste in music, movies and games. Users can also upload an image of themselves to add to their profiles. Inappropriate Content Notice message shown after the user has been reported three times. Within a year of the launch of the site, Chatroulette received criticism, especially regarding the offensive, obscene, or pornographic material that some users of this site were exposing. The psychiatrist Dr. Keith Ablow recommended: "The parents should keep all their children out of the site because it is too dangerous for children. It's a predator's paradise. This is one of the worst faces of the Internet I've seen. He's disconnecting human relationships rather than linking them." Emie Allen, president of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, told CBS The first show that the site was "the last place parents want their children to be. This is a huge red flag; this is an extreme social network. This is a place where children are about to gravitate. "[25] Ternovskiy told the New York Times that "Everyone finds its way to use the site. Somethat it is a game, others think it is an unknown world, others think it is a dating service. I think it's good that such a concept can be useful for so many people. Although some people are using itin not very beautiful ways -- I am really against it."[25] The first users of the site would often encounter users who were naked or masturbating in front of the camera. According to some reports and a first-hand test, most site users are male and overwhelmingly young, and people in their 30 are usually mocked on the site to be too "old". Some users dress up in costumes to entertain the viewer the site mates them with, while others play music or dance parties host. [2] In 2011, artists Eva and Franco Mattes presented random Chatroulette users with a visual vision of a man who apparently hanged, and recorded reactions. [26] According to a survey conducted by RJMetrics, about one out of eight of Chatroulette's feeds involved the content "R-rated". [6] Parody shows like The Daily Show and South Park have flashed this aspect of the service, and nudity has become a consolidated part of the site's reputation. [7] A complicated legal environment surrounds Chatroulette with respect to sexual activities that frequently occur on the site. These activities may be illegal, but those responsible for such content are uncertain because of the level of anonymity of users. [2] Reaction to criticism In response, the site has discouraged under the 18s of using the site, and prohibits "pornographic" behavior. Users who experience harassment or testify to illegal, immoral or pornographic activities may report the offended user. If three users complain about the same participant within five minutes, the user is temporarily banned from the service. [5] In August 2012, Chatroulette removed the Provisional Mode function of the website,[clarification required] and published new terms and conditions, stating that nudity was no longer permitted anywhere on the site. [27] Chatroulette later changed the termsuse, making it a requirement that all users enroll before using the service. At the beginning of the operation of the site, an algorithm has been developed to successfully filter the large largeof obscene content on Chatroulette, considering that up to 30% of the 8,5 million unique monthly visitors are less than 18 years old. This led to a greater percentage of female users accessing the service due to cleaning. [28] Image recognition algorithms automatically ban users transmitting sexual content. The filter works so that it identifies excessive amounts of revealed skin while simultaneously recognizing faces as appropriate. A 20,000-user-based sample study showed that the algorithm is able to filter nearly 60% of the offensive material along with ads on the site. [28] While video streams are transmitted peer-to-peer without going through the site server, Chatroulette periodically takes screenshots of the user's video content. Human beings then control screenshots marked by algorithms and keep blocking users who offend for a period of time. In an interview, Ternovskiy says, "While recognition software improves, we used a moderation team to review images manually. Now we have about 100 moderators who are monitoring all webcam feeds and marking inappropriate ones. The combination of filter technology and moderation causes the ban of 50,000 inappropriate users per day.
